NEW QUESTION: 1

Which choice below is NOT a security goal of an audit mechanism?

- A. Review patterns of access to individual objects
- B. Review employee production output records
- C. Discover when a user assumes a functionality with privileges greater than his own
- D. Deter perpetrators attempts to bypass the system protection mechanisms

Answer: B

Explanation:

The audit mechanism of a computer system has five important security goals:

1.The audit mechanism must allow the review of patterns of access to individual objects, access histories of specific processes and individuals, and the use of the various protection mechanisms supported by the system and their effectiveness.2

2.Allow discovery of both users and outsiders repeated attempts to bypass the protection mechanisms.

3.Allow discovery of any use of privileges that may occur when a user assumes a functionality with privileges greater than his or her own, i.e., programmer to administrator. In this case, there may be no bypass of security controls, but nevertheless, a violation is made possible.

4.Act as a deterrent against perpetrators habitual attempts to bypass the system protection mechanisms. However, to act as a deterrent, the perpetrator must be aware of the audit mechanisms existence and its active use to detect any attempts to bypass system protection mechanisms.

5.Supply an additional form of user assurance that attempts to bypass the protection mechanisms that are recorded and discovered.<sup>3</sup> Even if the attempt to bypass the protection mechanism is successful, the audit trail will still provide assurance by its ability to aid in assessing the damage done by the violation, thus improving the systems ability to control the damage.

a specific organization, seeking unauthorized access to confidential data.
