NEW QUESTION: 4

You are the Project Manager for your company. You have an administrative assistant who reviews task information submitted between you and the project team. The project team has a defined set of activities that they must do in order to complete tasks and then submit them for review. You have decided to create a diagram that will show the workflow of the task assignment, completion, and approval process. The workflow includes you, your administrative assistant, and the project team. While the different activities are connected, each member of the workflow has their own section to see the activities that are unique to them in the workflow. This diagram allows each member of the process to see where they fit into the overall flow and what their responsibilities are. What is this diagram called?

- A. Pareto chart
- B. Swim lane diagram
- C. Swim lane diagram
- D. Project network diagram

Answer: B

Explanation:

This is an example of a swim lane diagram, as each member of the workflow is to stay "within their lanes" and complete their activities as the activities are assigned to each member of the project team. Answer option A is incorrect. This is a type of a workflow diagram, but workflows do not designate the activities by person, like a swim lane diagram does. Answer option C is incorrect. A Pareto chart illustrates categories of failure from largest to smallest. Answer option B is incorrect. A project network diagram is a workflow that shows the order of project activities from the start of the project to the end of the project.
