NEW QUESTION: 2

A portable computer that runs Windows 8.1 uses a mobile broadband connection for the corporate wireless network. The computer also has a wired corporate network connection. The computer successfully downloads Windows updates when connected to either network.

You need to ensure that the computer automatically downloads updates by using Windows Update while also connected to the wireless corporate network connection.

What should you do?

A. Set the corporate wireless network to non-metered.

B. Set the corporate wireless network to metered.

C. Configure the Specify intranet Microsoft update service location local Group Policy setting.

D. Configure a Windows Firewall connection security rule.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Setting a Wireless network to METERED allows only critical Windows Updates using that connection.

Setting a Wireless network to NON-METERED allows all Windows Updates using that connection.

Metered Internet connections: FAQ

What's a metered Internet connection?

Internet service providers can charge by the amount of data used (the amount of data sent and received by your PC). That's called a metered Internet connection. These plans often have a data limit, and if you exceed the limit you might have to pay extra. In some cases, you aren't charged extra but your connection speed becomes slower until the billing cycle ends.

If you have a metered Internet connection, setting your network connection to metered in Windows can help you reduce the amount of data you send and receive.

How does setting my network connection to metered affect my PC? Any app that relies on an Internet connection to update or display info might be limited in the amount of data it can download or display. You might notice these and other effects:

Windows Update will only download priority updates.

Further Information:

Setting a Wireless network to METERED allows only critical Windows Updates using that connection.

Setting a Wireless network to NON-METERED allows all Windows Updates using that connection.
