Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

In the above diagram, the raw data is available in the Application layer of the TCP/IP model. The data coded according to the Application layer protocols is encapsulated into one or more transport layer protocols, which finally used by the lower layer protocols to affect the actual data transfer.

In the Transport layer, the data is combined with the UDP header. The responsibilities of the Transport Layer include end-to-end message transfer capabilities independent of the underlying network, along with error control, segmentation, flow control, congestion control, and application addressing (port numbers).

In the Internet layer, the data and UDP header are combined to form an IP data, which is navigated by the IP header across the Internet for its exact destination.

In the Link layer, the IP data and IP header combine to form the final frame data, which is accompanied by the Frame header and Frame Footer. The Link Layer is used to move packets between the Internet Layer interfaces of two different hosts on the same link. Main function of the Link layer is to add a packet header to prepare it for transmission and then actually transmit the frame over a physical medium.
