NEW QUESTION: 1

The MOST likely explanation for a successful social engineering attack is:

A. that computers make logic errors.

- B. the technological sophistication of the attack method.
- C. the computer knowledge of the attackers.
- D. that people make judgment errors.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Humans make errors in judging others; they may trust someone when, in fact, the person is untrustworthy.

Driven by logic, computers make the same error every time they execute the erroneous logic; however, this is not the basic argument in designing a social engineering attack. Generally, social engineering attacks do not require technological expertise; often, the attacker is not proficient in information technology or systems. Social engineering attacks are human-based and generally do not involve complicated technology.
