You are developing an n-tier application. An architect has provided a layer diagram as shown in the exhibit image. (Click the Exhibit button.)

Your code is built as part of an automated team build. A class in the data access layer is changed to utilize a utility class that resides in the business logic layer. You need to ensure that the code and layer diagram are valid in a manner that follows good architectural and object oriented practices.

What should you do?

- A. Change the dependency between the data access layer and the business logic layer to be bi-directional.
- B. Create a new cross-cutting layer and refactor the utility class into the new layer, allowing the data access layer and business logic layer to have one-way dependencies to the new layer.
- C. Create a new cross-cutting layer and refactor the utility class into the new layer, allowing the new layer to reference both the data access layer and the business logic layer.
- D. Leave the layers the same and duplicate the utility class in both the data access layer and the business logic layer.
