NEW QUESTION: 1
Given: As the wireless LAN administrator, it is part of your responsibility to detect and eliminate rogue access points. You have educated end users about the dangers of rogue devices and have implemented a security policy sufficient to deter employees from placing rogues on the network.
You have located a rogue access point for which no employee will take responsibility for installing. You must assume that someone intentionally placed the rogue access point to attack your network. You determine that the rogue was not present on the network the previous day. By viewing the HTML management interface, you determine that the rogue has only been powered up for 15 minutes. What is your next task to deal with this situation?
A. Document the incident. Power down the access point, and take it to the police for fingerprinting tests.
B. Disconnect the rogue access point's wired network connection, and save and analyze its log files.
C. Document the incident and report it to the highest level of management as a breach of security. Contact thepolice.
D. Reconfigure all authorized access points to your organization's default security settings. Leave the rogue inplace as a trap for the intruder.
E. Temporarily shut down the entire wireless segment of the network pending an internal criminal investigation
Answer: B
Explanation:
Disconnecting the rogue access point's wired network connection, and saving and analyzing itslog files should be done because you need to remove the rogue immediately from the network,but not disrupt normal company operations before you have all the facts from the log files. Thisis a measured response that should be defined in the company's security policy. It might notalways be possible to recover log files from a rogue access point because it may not have thedefault password set. Resetting the unit to manufacturer's default settings would also clear the log files. Incases like this, the only recourse is to have a WIPS in place that has monitoredactivity between the rogue and any client devices. Upper management should only be contacted if there is sufficient evidence to prosecute thisbreach of policy internally (which this is not). Police will not be interested about an internalmatter unless you can prove the rogue was placed by someone who broke a local law (liketrespassing). Documenting the incident is a good idea. Reconfiguring all authorized access points toyourorganization's default security settings and leaving the rogue in place as a trap for the intruderis incorrect because you should check your APs for tampering, but you should alsoimmediately remove the rogue. Temporarily shutting down the entire wireless segment of the network pending an internalcriminal investigation is incorrect

because it could shut-down your company's network for whatmight be a minimal intrusion. Such a response should already be set down in policy with regardto Business Impact Analysis and Business Continuity.

Answer: B
Explanation:
Explanation
With client-side encryption you create and manage your own encryption keys. Keys you create are not exported to AWS in clear text. Your applications encrypt data before submitting it to Amazon S3, and decrypt data after receiving it from Amazon S3. Data is stored in an encrypted form, with keys and algorithms only known to you. While you can use any encryption algorithm, and either symmetric or asymmetric keys to encrypt the data, the AWS-provided Java SDK offers Amazon S3 client-side encryption features.
