NEW QUESTION: 1

Scenario:

- A. Option D
- B. Option B
- C. Option A
- D. Option C

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2

Yes or No: The number of marks will increase when you increase the number of Dimensions in a view

- A. No

B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

Of course! As an example, see below:

1) Using the Sample Superstore data, let's plot a bar chart showing the Sales for each Category:

Observe that we have 3 marks - Each bar in a bar chart is called a mark. Similarly, each point in a scatter plot is also a mark , and so on for all charts.

1 row by 3 columns means that clearly on the y-axis (Sales), we have only a single mark - a single continuous axis, but 3 different marks (Technology, Furniture and Office supplies) on the x-axis.

2) Now let's add subcategory to the view as well (another dimension):

Observe that the number of marks has increased - i.e the number of Bars.

Also, notice we now have 1 row and 17 columns. Simply because 1 row = Sales (on the y-axis), and on the x-axis, we have 17 different columns (i.e product sub categories!!)
