Box 1: Microsoft Exchange Server Profile Analyzer Box 2: Exchange Mailbox Server Role Requirements Calculator Box 3: Microsoft Exchange Server JetStress 2010

Note:

*IOPS (Input/Output Operations Per Second, pronounced eye-ops) is a common performance measurement used to benchmark computer storage devices like hard disk drives (HDD), solid state drives (SSD), and storage area networks (SAN). As with any benchmark, IOPS numbers published by storage device manufacturers do not guarantee real-world application performance.

*Use the Microsoft Exchange Server Profile Analyzer tool to collect estimated statistical information from a single mailbox store or across an Exchange Server organization. The collected data can be used for such tasks as analyzing the performance and health of a server that has mailboxes, improving capacity planning models, and improving testing methodologies and tools.

*After you have determined the design you would like to implement, you can leverage the Exchange 2010 Mailbox Server Role Requirements Calculator to calculate your solution's CPU, memory, and storage requirements.

*Jetstress 2010 works with the Microsoft Exchange Server 2010 database engine to simulate the Exchange database and log disk input/output (I/O) load. You can use Jetstress 2010 to verify the performance and stability of a disk subsystem prior to putting an Exchange 2010 server into production. Jetstress helps verify disk performance by simulating Exchange disk I/O load. Jetstress simulates the Exchange database and log file loads produced by a specific number of users. You use Performance Monitor, Event Viewer, and the Exchange Server Database Utilities (Eseutil.exe) tool in conjunction with Jetstress to verify that your disk subsystem meets or exceeds the performance criteria you establish. After successful completion of the Jetstress disk performance and stress tests in a nonproduction environment, you will have verified that your Exchange 2010 disk subsystem is adequately sized (in terms of performance criteria you establish) for the user count and user profiles you have established.
