$2,880,000 is 70%.
Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2
You have enabled resumable space allocation in your database by setting the RESUMABLE_TIMEOUT parameter set to a nonzero value.
Which three statements about resumable space allocation are true? (Choose three.)
A. When a resumable statement is suspended, the transaction that contains the statement is also suspended.
B. A resumable statement is suspended only if an out of space error occurs.
C. Even with resumable space allocation enabled for your database, you can disable resumable space allocation for a single session.
D. A resumable statement can only be suspended and resumed once during the execution of the statement.
E. You can query the V$SESSION_WAIT dynamic performance view to identify the statements that are suspended for a session.
Answer: A,C,E Explanation:
The following three statements are true about resumable space allocation: Even with resumable space allocation enabled for your database, you can disable resumable space allocation for a single session. When a resumable statement is suspended, the transaction that contains the statement is also suspended. You can query the V$SESSION_WAIT dynamic performance view to identify the statements that are suspended for a session.
Resumable space allocation is an Oracle feature that allows certain statements to be suspended if space errors, such as out of space errors, space quota exceeded errors, or maximum extents reached errors, occur. Resumable statements include SELECT statements, DML statements, SQL*Loader imports and exports, and some DDL statements. You enable resumable space allocation by setting the RESUMABLE_TIMEOUT parameter to a value greater than zero. The parameter represents the amount of time, in seconds, that a resumable statement will be suspended before it is terminated and an error is generated. You can also set this value for a session using the ALTER SESSION ENABLE RESUMABLE TIMEOUT n; statement, or, you can disable resumable space allocation for a session using the ALTER SESSION DISABLE RESUMABLE; statement. If you have enabled resumable space allocation and a resumable statement experiences a space error, the statement is suspended. If the statement is contained within a transaction, the transaction is also suspended. This gives you the opportunity to correct the space issue. After the space issue is corrected, the suspended statement automatically resumes execution. You can query the V $SESSION_WAIT dynamic performance view to identify the statements that are suspended for a session. The event column of the V$SESSION_WAIT view will display statement suspended, wait error to be cleared for a statement that is suspended. The sid column identifies the session id that executed the suspended statement, and the seconds_in_wait column displays the number of seconds the statement has been suspended. The option that states a resumable statement is suspended only if an out of space error occurs is incorrect. A resumable statement is also suspended if a space quota is exceeded or a maximum extents reached error occurs. The option that states a resumable statement can only be suspended and resumed once during the execution of the statement is incorrect. A statement can be suspended and resumed multiple times during its execution.
